The Merry Deuill of Edmonton.

The Prologue.

YOur silence and attention worthy friends,
That your free spirits may with more pleasing sence,
Relish the life of this our actiue sceane,
To which intent, to calme this murmuring breath,
We ring this round with our inuoking spelles,
If that your listning eares be yet prepard
To entertaine the subiect of our Play,
Lend vs your patience.
Tis Peter Fabell a renowned Scholler,
Whose fame hath still beene hitherto forgot,
By all the Writers of this latter age.
In Middle-sex his birth and his abode,
Not full seauen miles from this great famous Citty,
That for his fame in sleights and magicke won,
was cald The merry Fiend of Edmonton.
If any heere make doubt of such a name,
In Edmonton yet fresh vnto this day,
Fixt in the wall of that old ancient Church
His Monument remaineth to be seene;
His memory yet in the mouthes of men,
That whilst he liu'd he could deceiue the Deuill.
Imagine now that whilst he is retir'd,
From Cambridge backe vnto his natiue home,
Suppose the silent sable visagde night,

Casts her blacke curtaine ouer all the world,
And whilest he sleepes within his silent bed,
Toyled with the studies of the passed day:
The very time and houre wherein that Spirit
That many yeares attended his commaund;
And often times twixt Cambridge and that towne,
Had in a minute borne him through the ayre:
By composition twixt the fiend and him, Draw the curtaines.
Comes now to claime the Scholler for his due.
Behold him heere laide on his restlesse couch,
His fatall chime prepared at his head,
His chamber guarded with his sable slights,
And by him stands that Negromaniicke chaire,
In which he makes his direfull inuocations,
And binds the fiends that shall obey his will.
Sit with a pleased eye vntill you know
The Commicke end of our sad Tragique show.

The Chime goes, in which time, Fabell is oft seene to start about him, and hould vp his hands.

Fab. What meanes the tolling of this fatall chime?
O what a trembling horror strikes my heart?
My stiffned haire stands vpright on my head,
As doe the bristles of a Porcupine.

Enter Coreb a Spirit.

Cor. Fabell awake, or I will beare thee hence headlong to Hell.

Fab. Ha, ha, why dost thou wake me?
Coreb, is it thou?

Cor. Tis I.

Fab. I know thee well, I heare the watchfull dogs, with hollow howling tell of thy approach,
The lights burne dim affrighted with thy presence:
And this distemperd and tempestuous night
Tells me the ayre is troubled with some Deuill.

Cor. Come art thou ready?

Fab.

Fab. Whither? or to what?

Cor. Why Scholler, this the houre my date expires,
I must depart, and come to claime my due.

Fab. Hah, what is thy due?

Cor. Fabell, thy selfe.

Fab. O let not darkenesse heere thee speake that word,
Least that with force it hurry hence amaine,
And leaue the world to looke vpon my woe,
Yet ouerwhelme me with this globe of earth,
And let a little sparrow with her bill
Take but so much as she can beare away,
That euery day thus loosing of my loade,
I may againe in time yet hope to rise.

Cor. Didst thou not write thy name in thine owne blood?
And drewst the formall deed twixt thee and mee,
And is it not recorded now in hell?

Fab. Why comst thou in this sterne and horred shape?
Not in familiar sort as thou wast wont?

Cor. Because the date of thy command is out,
And I am master of thy skill and thee.

Fab. Coreb, thou angry and Impatient spirit,
I haue earnest businesse for a priuate friend,
Reserue me spirt vntill some further time.

Cor. I will not for the mines of all the earth.

Fab. Then let me rise, and ere I leaue the world,
Ile dispatch some busines that I haue to doe,
And in meane time repose thee in that chaire.

Cor. Fabell, I will, Sit downe.

Fab. O that this soule that cost so great a price,
As the deere pretious bloud of her redeemer,
Inspirde with knowledge, should by that alone
Which makes a man so meane vnto the powers,
Euen lead him downe into the depth of hell,
When men in their owne pride striue to know more
Then man shou'd know!
For this alone God cast the Angels downe,
The infinitie of Arts is like a sea,

Into

Into which when man will take in hand to saile
Further then reason, which should be his Pilot,
Hath skill to guide him, loosing once his compasse,
He falleth to such deepe and dangerous whirlepooles,
As he doth loose the very sight of heauen:
The more he striues to come to quiet harbor,
The further still he findes himselfe from land,
Man striuing still to finde the depth of euill,
Seeking to be a God, becomes a Deuill.

Cor. Come Fabell, hast thou don?

Fabell. Yes, yes, come hither:

Cor. Fabell, I cannot.

Fabell. Cannot, what ayles your hollownesse?

Cor. Godd Fabell helpe me.

Fab. Alas where lies your griefe? some Aqua-vitæ,
The Deuil's very sicke, I feare hee'l die,
for he lookes very ill.

Cor. Darst thou deride the minister of darkenesse?
In Lucifers great name Coreb coniures thee to set him free.

Fab. I will not for all the mines of all the earth,
Vnlesse thou giue me liberty to see,
Seauen yeares more before thou seaze on mee.

Cor. Fabell, I giue it thee.

Fab. Sweare damned fiend.

Cor. Vnbinde me, and by hell I will not touch thee,
Till seauen yeares from this houre be full expired.

Fab. Enough, come out.

Cor. A vengeance take thy art,
Liue, and conuert all piety to euill,
Neuer did man thus ouer-reach the Deuill;
No time on earth like Phaetontique flames,
Can haue perpetuall being. Ile returne
To my infernall mansion, but be sure
Thy seauen yeares don, no tricke shall make me tarry,
But Coreb, thou to hell shalt Fabell carry.

Fab. Then thus betwixt vs two this variance ends,

Thou to thy fellow Fiends, I to my Friends. Exit.

Enter Sir Arthur Clare, Dorcas his Lady, Millisent his Daughter, young Clare, the men booted, the Gentle-women in Cloakes and Safe-gardes, Blague the merry Host of the George comes in with them.

Host. VVElcome good Knight to the George at Waltham,
My Freehold, my Tenements, goods & chattels:
Madam heer's a roome in the very Homer & Iliads of a lodging, it hath none of the foure elements in it; I built it out of the Center, and I drinke nere the lesse Sacke.
Welcome my little wast of Maiden-heads, what?
I serue the good Duke of Norfolke.

Clare. God a mercy my good Host Blague,
Thou hast a good seat heere.

Host. Tis correspondent or so, there's not a Tartarian
Nor a Carrier shall breath vpon your Geldings,
They haue villanous rancke feete, the rogues,
And they shall not sweat in my linnen.
Knights and Lords too haue beene drunke in my house,
I thanke the Destinies.

Har. Pre'the good sinfull In-keeper, will that corrnptiō, thine Ostler looke well to my Gelding: Hay, a poxe of these rushes.

Host. You, Saint Dennis, your Gelding shall walke without doores, and coole his feete for his maisters sake, by the body of S. George, I haue an excellent intellect to go steale some venison: Now when wast thou in the Forrest?

Har. A way you stale messe of white-broth: Come hither Sister, let me helpe you.

Clare. Mine Host, is not Sir Richard Mounchensey come yet, according to our appoyntment when we last dined heere?

Host. The Knights not yet apparant, marry heer's a forerunner that summons a parley; and faith, hee'le be here top and top gallant presently.

Clar. Tis well; good mine Host goe downe, and see breakefast beprouided.

Host. Knight, thy breath hath the force of a woman, it takes me downe, I am for the baſer Element of the Kitchin; I retire like a valiant Soldier, face point-blanke to the foe-man; or like a Courtier, that muſt not ſhew the Prince his poſteriors; vaniſh to know my Canuaſadoes, and my interrogatories, for I ſerue the good Duke of Norfolke.

Clar. How doth my Lady, are you not weary Madame? Come hither, I muſt talke in priuate with you, My daughter Milliſent muſt not ouer-heare.

Mill. I, whiſpering, pray God it tend to my good, Strange feares aſſailes my heart, vſurpes my blood.

Cla. You know our meeting with the Knight Mounchenſey, Is to aſſure our Daughter to his Heire.

Dor. Tis without queſtion.

Cla. Two tedious winters haue paſt ore, ſince firſt Theſe couple lou'd each other, and in paſſion, Glewd firſt their naked hands with youthfull moyſture, iuſt ſo long on my knowledge.

Dor. And what of this?

Cla. This morning ſhould my Daughter looſe her name, And to Mounchenſeyes houſe conuey our armes, Quartered within his ſcutchion; th'affiance made Twixt him and her. this morning ſhould be ſeald.

Dor. I know it ſhould.

Cla. But there are croſſes wife, heer's one in Waltham, An other at the Abbey; and the third At Cheſton: and it is omnious to paſſe Any of theſe without a Pater-noſter. Croſſes of loue ſtill thwart this marriage, Whilſt that we two like ſpirits walke in night, About thoſe ſtony and hard hearted plots.

Mill. O God, what meanes my Father?

Cla. For looke you wife, the riotous old Knight Hath ore-run his annuall reuenue, In keeping iolly Chriſtmas all the yeare, The noſtrilles of his chimneys are ſtill ſtufft With ſmoake, more chargeable then Cane-tobacco; His hawkes deuoure his fatteſt Dogs, whilſt ſimple,

His leaneſt Curres eate his hounds carrion;
Beſides I heard of late, his younger Brother,
Or Turkey-Merchant, hath ſure ſuc'de the Knight,
By meanes of ſome great loſſes on the Sea:
That you conceiue me, before God all naught,
His ſeate is weake, thus each thing rightly ſcand,
Youle ſee a flight, wife ſhortly of his Land.

Mill. Treaſon to my hearts trueſt Soueraigne,
How ſoone is loue ſmothered in foggy gaine?

Dor. But how ſhall we preuent this dangerous match?

Clar. I haue a plot, a tricke, and this it is,
Vnder this colour, Ile breake off the match;
Ile tell the Knights that now my minde is changde
For marrying of my daughter; for I entend
To ſend her vnto Cheſton Nunry,

Mill. O me accurſt!

Clar. There to become a moſt religious Nunne.

Mill. Ile firſt be buried quicke.

Clar. To ſpend her beauty in moſt priuate praiers.

Mill. Ile ſooner be a ſinner, in forſaking
Mother and Father.

Clar. How doſt like my plot?

Dor. Exceeding well, but is it your intent
She ſhall continue there

Clar. Continue there, ha, ha, that were a ieſt;
You know, a Virgin may continue there
A twelue-month and a day, onely on triall,
There ſhall my Daughter ſoiourne ſome three moneths,
And in meane time Ile compaſſe a faire match
Twixt youthfull Ierningham, the luſty Heire
Of Sir Ralph Ierningham, dwelling in the forreſt;
I thinke they'le both come hither with Mounchenſey.

Dor. Your care argues the loue you beare your childe,
I will ſubſcribe to any thing youle haue me.

Mill. You will ſubſcribe to it, good, good, tis well,
Loue hath two chaires of ſtate, heauen and hell;
My deare Mounchenſey, thou my death ſhalt rue,

Ere to thy heart Millisent prooue vntrue. Exit.

Enter Blague.

Host. Ostlers you knaues and commanders, take the Horses of the Knights and Competitors: your honorable Hulkes haue put into harborough, theile take in fresh-water here, and I haue prouided cleane chamber-pots. Via, they come.

Enter Sir Richard Mounchensey, Sir Ralph Ierningham, young Franke Ierningham, Raymond Mounchensey, Peter Fabell, and Bilbo.

Host. The Destinies be most neate Chamberlaines to these swaggering Puritanes, Knights of the subsidie,

Sir Moun. God a mercy good mine Host.

Sir Iern. Thankes good host Blague.

Host. Roome for my case of Pistolles, that haue Greeke and Lataine bullets in them: let me cling to your flanckes my nimble Giberlaters, and blow winde in your calues to make thē swell bigger. Ha: ile caper in mine owne Fee-simple, away with puntillios, and Orthography, I serue the good Duke of Norfolke.

Bilbo. Titere tu patulæ recubans sub tegmine fagi.

Truly mine Host, Bilbo, though he be somewhat out of fashion, will be your onely blade still, I haue a villanous sharpe stomacke to slice a breake-fast.

Host. Thou shalt haue it without any more discontinuance, releases, or attornament; what? we know our termes of hunting, and the Sea-Carde.

Bil. And doe you serue the good Duke of Norfolke still?

Host. Still, & still, & still, my souldier of S. Quintins, come, follow me, I haue Charles-waine belowe in a butte of Sacke, I will glister like your Crab-fish.

Bilb. You haue fine Scholler-like tearmes, your Coopers Dictionary is your onely booke to studie in a Cellar, a man shall finde very strange wordes in it; come my Host, lets serue the good Duke of Norfolke.

Host. And still, and still, and still my Boy, ile serue the good Duke of Norfolke.

Ier.

Ier. Good Sir Arthur Clare.

Clar. What Gentleman is that? I know him not.

Moun. Tis M. Fabell sir, a Cambridge Scholler,
My sonnes deere friend.

Clar. Sir, I intreat you know me.

Fab. Command me sir, I am affected to you
For your Mounchensyes sake.

Clar. Alas for him,
I not respect whether he sinke or swime:
A word in priuate sir Ralph Iernyngham.

Ray. Me thinkes your Father lookes strangely on me;
Say Loue, why are you sad?

Mill. I am not Sweete;
Passion is strong, when woe with woe doe meete.

Clar. Shall's in to breakefast, after wee'l conclude
The cause of this our comming, in and feede,
And let that vsher a more serious deed.

Mill. Whilst you desire his griefe, my heart shall bleede.

Young Ier. Raymond Mounchersey, come be frolicke friend,
This is the day thou hast expected long.

Ray. Pray God deere Harry Clare it prooue so happy,

Ier. Ther's nought can alter it, be merry Lad.

Fab. Ther's nought shall alter it, be liuely Raymond,
Stand any opposition gainst thy hope,

Peter Fabell, solus.

Fab. Good old Mounchensey, is thy hap so ill,
That for thy bounty, and thy royall parts,
Thy kinde alliance should be held in scorne,
And after all these promises by Clare,
Refuse to giue his Daughter to thy Sonne,
Onely because thy Reuenues can not reach,
To make her dowage of so rich a ioynture,
As can the Heire of wealthy Iernyngham?
And therefore is the false foxe now in hand,
To strike a match betwixt her and th'other,
And the old gray-beards now are close together,

Plotting it in the garden. Is't euen so?
Raymon. Mounchensey, boy, haue thou and I
Thus long at Cambridge read the liberall Arts,
The Metaphisickes, Magicke, and those parts,
Of the most secret deepe Philosophie?
Haue I so many melancholly nights
Watch'd on the top of Peter-house highest tower?
And come we backe vnto our natiue home,
For want of skill to loose the wench thou lou'st?
Weele first hang Enuill in such rings of mist
As neuer rose from any dampish fenne;
Ile make the brinde sea to rise at Ware,
And drowne the marshes vnto Stratford-bridge;
Ile driue the Deere from Waltham in their walkes,
And scatter them like sheepe in euery field:
We may perhaps be crost, but if we be,
He shall crosse the Deuill that but crosses me.

Enter Reymond and young Ierningham.

But heere comes Reymond, disconsolant and sad,
And heere comes the Gallant must haue the wench.

Ier. I pre'thee Reymond leaue these solemne dumpes,
Reuiue thy spirits, thou that before hast beene
More watchfull then the day-proclayming Cocke,
As sportiue as a Kid, as francke and merry
As mirth her selfe.
If ought in me may thy content procure,
It is thine owne thou maist thy selfe assure.

Ray. Ha Ierningham, if any but thy selfe
Had spoke that word, it would haue come as cold
As the bleake Northerne winds, vpon the face
Of winter.
From thee they haue some power of my blood,
Yet being from thee, had but that hollow sound,
Come from the lips of any liuing man,
It might haue won the credite of mine eare,
From thee it cannot.

Ier. If I vnderstand thee, I am a villaine,

What,

What, doſt thou ſpeake in parables to thy friends?

Clar. Come Boy, and make me this ſame growning Loue,
Troubled with ſtitches, and the cough o'th lungs,
That wept his eyes out when he was a childe,
And euer ſince hath ſhot at hudman-blinde,
Make her leape, caper, ierke, and laugh, and ſing,
And play me horſe-trickes,
Make Cupid wanton as his Mothers Doue,
But, in this ſort boy I would haue thee loue.

Fab. Why how now mad-cap? what my luſty Franke,
So neere a wife, and will not tell your friend?
But you will to this geere in hugger-mugger:
Art thou turnd miſer raſcall in thy loues?

Ier. Who I? z'blood, what ſhould all you ſee in me,
That I ſhould looke like a married man? ha,
Am I balde? are my leggs too little for my hoſe?
If I feele any thing in my forehead, I am a villaine,
Doe I weare a night cap? doe I bend in the hams? (ha?
What doſt thou ſee in me that I ſhould be towards marriage?

Clar. What, thou married? let me looke vpon thee,
Rogue, who has giuen this out of thee?
How camſt thou into this ill name? what company
Haſt thou bin in Raſcall?

Fab. You are the man ſir, muſt haue Milleſcent,
The match is making in the garden now,
Her jonture is a greed on, and th'old men
Your fathers, meane to lanch their buſie baggs;
But in meane time to thruſt Mounchenſey off,
For colour of this new intended match,
Faire Milleſcent to Cheſton muſt be ſent,
To take the approbation for a Nun.
Nere looke vpon me lad, the match is done.

Ier. Raymond Mounchenſey, now I touch thy griefe,
With the true feeling of a zealous friend.
And as for faire and beauteous Milleſcent,
With my vaine breath I will not ſeeke to ſlubber,
Her angell like perfections, but thou knowſt,

That

That Essex hath the Saint that I adore,
Where ere did'st meete me, but we two were Iouiall,
But like a wag, thou hast not laught at me,
And with regardles iesting mockt my loue?
Now many a sad and weary summer night,
My sighes haue drunke the dew from off the earth,
And I haue taught the Nightingale to wake,
And from the meadowes sprung the earely Larke,
An hower before she should haue list to sing;
I haue loaded the poore minutes with my moanes,
That I haue made the heauy slow pasde houres,
To hang like heauy clogs vpon the day.
But deere Mounchensey, had not my affection
Seazde on the beauty of another Dame,
Before I would wrong the chase, and leaue the loue,
Of one so worthy, and so true a friend,
I will abjure both beauty and her sight,
And will in loue become a counterfeite.

Moun. Deere Iernigham, thou hast begot my life,
And from the mouth of Hell, wh ere now I sate,
I feele my spirit rebound against the stars:
Thou hast conquer'd me deere friend in my free soule,
There time or death can by their power controule.

Fab. Franke Iernigham, thou art a gallant boy,
And were he not my Pupiil, I would say,
He were as fine a metled Gentleman,
Of as free spirit, and of as fine a temper,
As is in England, and he is a man,
That very richly may deserue thy loue.
But noble Clare, this while of our discourse,
What may Mounchensey's honour to thy selfe,
Exact vpon the measure of thy grace?

Cla. Raymond Mounchensey, I would haue thee know,
He does not breath this ayre,
Whose loue I cherish and whose soule I loue,
More then Mounchenseyes:
Nor euer in my life did see the man,
Whom for his wit and many vertuous parts,

I thinke more worth of my Sisters loue.
But since the matter growes vnto this passe,
I must not seeme to crosse my Fathers will:
But when thou list to visit her by night,
My Horse is sadled, and the stable doore
Stands ready for thee, vse them at thy pleasure;
In honest marriage wed her frankly boy,
And if thou gets her lad, God giue thee ioy.

Moun. Then care away, let Fate my fall pretend,
Backt with the fauours of so true a friend.

Fab. Let vs alone to bussell for the set,
For Age and Craft, with Wit and Art hath met.
Ile make my Spirits to daunce such nightly ligges,
Along the way twixt this and Totnam Crosse;
The Carriers Iades shall cast their heauy packes,
And the strong hedges scarce shall keepe them in:
The Milke-maides Cutts shall turne the wenches off,
And lay their Dossers tumbling in the dust:
The franke and merry London Prentises,
That come for Cream, and lusty countrey Cheere,
Shall loose their way, and scrambling in the ditches,
All night, shall whoope and hollow, cry, and call,
And none to other finde the way at all.

Moun. Pursue the proiect Scholler, what we can doe,
To helpe indeauour, ioyne our liues thereto. Exeunt.

Enter Bankes, Sir Iohn, and Smug.

Banks. Take me with you good Sir Iohn; a plague on thee Smug, and thou toucheſt liquor thou art founderd streight: What? are your braines alwaies water-milles? must they euer runne round?

Smug. Bankes, your Ale is as a Philistine Foxe; nounes theres fire i't taile on't; you are a rogue to charge vs with Mugs i'th rereward: a plague of this wiude, O it tickles our Catstrophe.

Sir Ioh. Neighbour Bankes of Waltham, & goodman Smug the honest Smith of Edmonton, as I dwell betwixt you both at Enfield, I know the taste of both your Ale-houses, they are good both, smart both; hem, grasse and hey, we are all mortall, let's liue till we die, and be merry, and ther's an end.

Banks. Well sayd sir Iohn, you are of the same humor still, and doth the water run the same way still boy?

Smug. Vulcan was a rogue to him: Sir Iohn, locke, locke, locke fast sir Iohn: So sir Iohn, Ile one of these yeares, when it shall please the Goddesses, and the Destenies, be drunke in your company; thats all now, and God send vs health; shall I sweare I loue you?

Sir Iohn. No oathes, no oathes, good neighbour Smug,
Weele wet our lippes together, and hugge,
Carouse in priuate, and eleuate the heart,
And the Liuer, and the Lights,
Marke you me, within vs, for hem,
Grasse and hey, we are all mortall, lets liue till we die,
and be merry, and thers an end.

Banks. But to our former motion, about stealing some Venison, whether goe we?

Sir Ioh. Into the Forrest neighbour Banks, into Brians walke, the mad Keeper.

Smug. Blood, Ile tickle your Keeper.

Banks. Yfaith thou art alwaies drunke, when we haue neede of thee.

Smug. Need of me? hart, you shall haue need of me alwaies, while thers yron in an Anuill.

Banks. M. Parson, may the Smith goe (thinke you) being in this taking?

Smug. Goe, Ile goe in spight of all the Belles in Waltham.

Sir Iohn. The question is, good Neighbour Bankes; let me see, the Moone shines to night; ther's not a narrow bridge betwixt this and the Forrest, his braine may be setled ere night, he may goe, he may goe neighbour Banks: Now we want none but the company of mine Host Blague of the George at Waltham, if he were heere, our Consort were full: Looke where comes my good Host, the Duke of Norfolkes man: and how? and how? a hem, grasse and hey, we are not yet mortall, lets liue till we die, and be merry, and thers an end. Enter Host.

Host. Ha, my Castilian Dialogues, and art thou in breath still boy? Miller, doth the match hould? Smith I see by thy eyes thou hast haſt bin reading a little Geneua print: But wend we merrily to the forreſt, to ſteale ſome of the Kings deere. Ile meet you at the time appointed: away, I haue Knights & Colonels at my houſe, and muſt tend the Hungarions. If we be ſcar'd in the Forreſt, weele meet in the Church-porch at Enfield; iſt correſpondent?

Banks. Tis well: But how if any of vs ſhould be taken?

Smug. He ſhall haue ranſome by my ſword.

Hoſt. Tuſh, the knaues Keepers are my bonaſoſis, and my pentioners, nine a clocke, be valiant, my little Gogmagogs; Ile fence with all the Iuſtices in Hartford-ſhire; Ile haue a Buck till I die, Ile ſlay a Doe while I liue, hold your bowe ſtreight and ſteady; I ſerue the good Duke of Norfolke.

Smug. O rare who ho, ho, boy.

Sir Iohn. Peace neighbour Smug, you ſee this Boore, a Boore of the Countrey, an illiterate Boore, & yet the Citizen of good-fellowes, come, lets prouide a Hen: graſſe and hey, we are not yet all mortall, weele liue till we die, and be merry, and thers an end, come Smug.

Enter the Knights and Gentlemen from breakefaſt againe.

Old Moun. Nor I for thee Clare,, not of this,
What? haſt thou fed me all this while with ſhales?
And com'ſt to tell me now thou lik'ſt it not?

Clare. I doe not hold thy offer competent:
Nor doe I like th'aſſurance of thy Land,
The title is ſo brangled with thy debts.

Old Mou. Too good for thee, and Knight thou knowſt it well, I fawnd not on thee, for thy goods, not I,
Twas thine owne motion, that thy wife doth know.

Lady. Husband it was ſo, he lies not in that.

Clar. Hold thy chat queane.

Old Moun. To which I hearkned, willingly, and the rather,
Becauſe I was perſwaded it proceeded
From loue thou bor'ſt to me, and to my Boy,
And gau'ſt him free acceſſe vnto thy houſe,
Where he hath not behau'd him to thy Childe,
But as befits a Gentleman to doe:
Nor is my poore diſtreſſed ſtate ſo low,

That Ile shut vp my doores I warrant thee.

Cla. Let it suffice Mouuchensey, I mislike it,
Nor thinke thy Sonne a match fit for my Childe.

Moun. I tell thee Clare, his blood is good and cleere,
As the best drop that panteth in thy veines:
But for this Maide, thy faire and vertuous childe,
She is more disparg'd by thy baseneſſe,
Then the most orient, and the pretious iewell,
Which still retaines his lustre and his beauty,
Although a slaue were owner of the same.

Cla. She is the last is left me to bestow,
And her I meane to dedicate to God.

Moun. You doe sir.

Clar. Sir, sir, I doe, she is mine owne.

Moun. And pitty she is so: aside.
Damnation dog thee, and thy wretched pelfe.

Cla. Not thou Mouncheney, shalt bestow my Childe

Moun. Neither shouldst thou bestow her where thou meanest.

Cla. What wilt thou doe?

Moun. No matter let that be,
I will doe that perhaps shall anger thee;
Thou hast wrongd my loue, and by a blessed Angell,
Thou shalt well know it.

Cla. Tut, braue not me.

Moun. Braue thee base Churle, wer't not for man-hood sake;
I say no more, but that there be some by,
Whose blood is hotter then ours is,
Which being stird, might make vs both repent
This foolish meeting: But Ralph Clare,
Although thy Father hath abusd my friendship,
Yet I loue thee, I doe my noble boy.
I doe y faith.

Lady. I, doe, doe, fill all the world with talke of vs man, man,
I never lookt for better at your hands.

Fab. I hop'd your great experience and your yeares,
Would haue proou'd patience rather to your soule,
Then with this frantique and vntamed passion.

To

To whet their Skeenes, and but for that
I hope their friendſhips are too well confirmd,
And their minds temperd with more kindly heate,
Then for their forward Parents frowardneſſe,
That they ſhould breake forth into publique braules,
How ere the rough hand of th'untoward world,
Hath moulded your proceedings in this matter,
Yet I am ſure the firſt intent was loue:
Then ſince the firſt ſpring was ſo ſweet and warme,
Let it die gently, ne're kill it with a ſcorne.

Ray. O thou baſe world, how leprous is that Soule
That is once limb'd in that polluted mudde:
Oh Sir Arthur, you haue ſtartled his free actiue ſpirits,
With a too ſharpe ſpur for his minde to beare:
Haue patience ſir, the remedy to woe,
Is to leaue that of force we muſt forgoe.

Mill. And I muſt take a twelue months approbation,
That in meane time this ſole and priuate life,
At the yeares end may faſhion me a wife:
But ſweete Mounchenſey ere this yeare be done,
Thou'ſt be a Frier if that I be a Nun:
And Father, ere young Iernyngbams Ile be,
I will turne mad, to ſpight both him and thee.

Clar. Wife, come to Horſe, and huſwife make you ready,
For if I liue, I ſweare by this good light,
Ile ſee you lodg'd in Cheſſon-houſe to night. Exeunt

Moun. Raymond away, thou ſeeſt how matters fall,
Churle, hell conſume thee, and thy pelfe and all.

Fab. Now M. Clare, you ſee how matters fadge,
Your Milleſcent muſt needes be made a Nun:
Well ſir, we are the men muſt ply the match,
Hold you your peace, and be a looker on,
And ſend her vnto Cheſſon, where he will,
Ile ſend me fellowes of a handfull hie,
Into the Cloiſters where the Nuns frequent,
Shall make them skip like Does about the dale,
And make the Lady Prioreſſe of the houſe,

To play at leape-frogge naked in their ſmocks,
Vntill the merry wenches at their maſſe,
Cry teehee, weehee,
And tickling theſe mad laſſes in their flanckes,
Shall ſpraule and ſqueake, and pinch their fellow Nunnes.
Be liuely boyes, before the wench we loſe,
Ile make the Abbas weare the Cannons hoſe. Exeunt.

Enter Harry Clare, Franke, Ierningham, Peter Fabell, and Milleſcent.

Ha Cla. Spight now hath done her worſt, ſiſter be patient.
Ier. Forewarnd poore Reymonds company O heauen,
When the compoſure of weake frailty meet,
Vpon this mart of durt; O then weake loue,
Muſt in her owne vnhappineſſe be ſilent,
And wincke on all deformities.
Mill. Tis well;
whers Reymond brother? wheres my deare Mounchenſey?
Would we might weepe together and then part,
Our ſighing parley would much eaſe my heart.
Fab. Sweete beauty fold your ſorrowes in the thought,
Of future reconcilement, let your teares
Shew you a woman; but be no further ſpent
Then from the eyes; for (ſweete) experience ſaies,
That loue is firme thats flattered with delaies.
Mill. Alas ſir, thinke you I ſhall ere be his?
Fab. As ſure as parting ſmiles on future bliſſe,
Yond comes my friend, ſee he hath doted
So long vpon your beauty, that your want
Will with a pale retirement waſte his blood,
For in true loue Muſicke doth ſweetly dwell,
Seuerd, theſe leſſe worlds beare within them hell.

Enter Mounchenſey.

Moun. Harry and Franke, you are enioynd to waine your friendſhip from me, we muſt part the breath of all aduiſed corruption, pardon me.

Faith

Faith I must say so, you may thinke I loue you,
I breath not, rougher spight doe seuer vs,
Weele meete by stealth, sweet friend by stealth you twaine,
Kisses are sweetest got by strugling paine.

Ier. Our friendship dies not Reymond.

Moun. pardon me:
I am busied, I haue lost my faculties,
And buried them in Millisents cleere eyes.

Mill. Alas sweet Loue what shall become of me?
I must to Chessom to the Nunnerie,
I shall neere see thee more.

Moun. How sweete,
Ile be thy votary, weele often meete,
This kisse diuides vs, and breaths soft adiew,
This be a double charme to keepe both true.

Fab. Haue done, your fathers may chance spie your parting,
Refuse you not by any meanes good sweetnesse?
To goe vnto the Nunnery, for from hence,
Must we beget your loues sweet happines,
You shall not stay there long, your harder bed,
Shall be more soft when Nun and maide are dead.

Enter Bilbo.

Moun. Now sirra what's the matter?

Bil. Marry you must to horse presently, that villanous old gowty churle, sir Richar. Clare longstill he be at the Nunrie.

Ha Cla. How sir?
O I cry you mercy, he is your father sir indeed; but I am sure that thers lesse affinity betwixt your two natures, then there is betweene a broker and a cutpurse.

Moun. Bring my gelding sirra.

Bil. Well nothing greeues me, but for the poore wench, she must now cry vale to Lobster pies. hartichokes and all such meates of mortality; poore gentlewoman, the signe must not be in virgo any longer with her, and that me grieues, farewell. Poore Millisent,
Must pray and repent.

O fatall wonder!
Sheele now be no fatter,
Loue muſt not come at her,
Yet ſhe ſhall be kept vnder. Exit.

Ier. Farewell deere Raymond.

Ha. Cla. Friend adew.

Mill. Deere ſweete,
Now ioy enioyes my heart till we next meete. Exeunt.

Fab. Well Raymond, now the tide of diſcontent
Beates in thy face, but er't be long, the winde
Shall turne the flood, we muſt to Waltham-Abbey,
And as faire Milliſcent in Cheſſon liues
A moſt vnwilling Nun, ſo thou ſhalt there
Become a beardleſſe Nouice, to what end,
Let time and future accidents declare:
Taſt thou my ſleights, thy loue Ile onely ſhare.

Moun. Turne Friar? come my good Counſeller lets goe,
Yet that diſguiſe will hardly ſhroude my woe. Exeunt.

Enter the Prioreſſe of Cheſſon, with a Nun or two, Sir Arthur Clare, Sir Ralph Ierningham, Henry and Franke, the Lady, and Bilbo, with Milleſcent.

La. Cla, Madam,
The loue vnto this holy Sifterhood,
And our confirmd opinion of your zeale,
Hath truely won vs to beſtow our Childe,
Rather on this then any neighbouring Cell.

Prio. Ieſus Daughter, Maries Childe,
Holy Matron, Woman milde,
For thee a Maſſe ſhall ſtill be ſaide,
Euery Sifter drop a Beade,
And thoſe againe ſucceeding them
For you ſhall ſing a Requiem.

Fran. The wench is gone Harry, ſhe is no more a woman of this world, marke her well, ſhe lookes like a Nun already, what think'ſt on her?

Har. By my faith her face comes handſomely to't,

But

But peace, lets heare the reſt.

Sir Ar. Madam for a twelue-months apprnbatie~, we meane to make the triall of our Childe.
Your care, and our deere bleſſing. in meane time
We pray, may proſper this intended worke.

Pri. May your Soule be blith,
That ſo truely pay your Tithe:
He that many Children gaue,
Tis fit that he one childe ſhould haue.
Then faire Virgin heare my ſpell,
For I muſt your duty tell.

Mill. Good men and true, ſtand together, and heare your charge.

Pri. Firſt, a mornings take your Booke,
The Glaſſe wherein your ſelfe muſt looke,
Your young thoughts, ſo proud and iolly,
Muſt be turn'd to motions holie;
For your Buske, Attyres, and Toyes,
Haue your thoughts on heauenly ioyes;
And for all your follies paſt,
You muſt doe penance, pray, and faſt.

Bil. Let her take heed of faſting, and if euer ſhe hurt her ſelfe with praying, Ile nere truſt beaſt.

Mill. This goes hard berlady.

Pri. You ſhall ring the Sacring bell,
Keepe your howers, and tell your Knell,
Riſe at midnight to your Mattins,
Read your Pſalter, ſing your Latins,
And when your blood ſhall kindle pleaſure,
Scourge your ſelfe in plenteous meaſure.

Mill. Worſe and worſe by Saint Mary.

Fra. Sirra, Hal, how does ſhe hold her countenance? well, goe thy waies, if euer thou proone a Nun, Ile build an Abbey.

Har. She may be a Nun, but if euer ſhe proone an Anchoreſſe, Ile digge her graue with my nailes.

Fra. To her againe Mother.

Har. Hold thine owne Wench.

Prio You must read the morning Masse,
You must creepe vnto the Crosse,
Put cold Ashes on your head,
Haue a haire-cloth for your bed.
Bil. She had rather haue a man in her bed.
Prio. Binde your beades, and tell your needes,
Your holy Auies, and your Creedes,
Holy-maide, this must be done,
If you meane to liue a Nunne.
Mill. The Holie-maide will be no Nunne.
Sir Ar. Madame, we haue some businesse of import,
And must be gone:
Wilt please you take my wife into your closet,
Who further will acquaint you with my minde,
And so good Madame for this time adieu. Exeunt women.
Sir Ra. Well now Franke Clare, how saist thou?
To be briefe,
What wilt thou say for all this, if we two,
Thy Father and my selfe, can bring about,
That we conuert this Nun to be a wife,
And thou the Husband to this pretty Nun;
How then my Lad? ha, Franke, it may be done.
Har. I, now it workes.
Fra. O God sir! you amaze me at your wordes;
Thinke with your selfe sir, what a thing it were,
To cause a Recluse to remooue her vow,
A maymed, contrite, and repentant soule,
Euer mortified with fasting, and with praier,
Whose thoughts euen as her eyes are fix'd on heauen;
To draw a Virgin thus deuout with Zeale,
Backe to the world, O impious deede;
Nor by the Canon Law can it be done,
Without a dispensation from the Church:
Besides, she is so prone vnto this life,
As shee'le euen shreeke to heare a husband nam'd.
Bil. I, a poore innocent shee: well heers no knauerie,
He flowtes the old Fooles to their teeth.

Sir Ra.

Sir Ra. Boy, I am glad to heare
Thou mak'ſt ſuch ſcruple of that Conſcience,
And in a man ſo young as is your ſelfe,
I promiſe you tis verie ſeldome ſeene.
But Franke, this is a tricke, a meere deuiſe,
A ſleight plotted betwixt her Father and my ſelfe;
To thruſt Mounchenſeyes noſe beſide the cuſhion,
That being thus debard of all acceſſe,
Time yet may worke him from her thoughts,
And giue thee ample ſcope tot hy deſires.

Bil. A plague on you both for a couple of Iewes.

Har. How now Franke, what ſay you to that?

Fra. Let me alone, I warrant thee:
Sir, aſſur'd that this motion doth proceede,
From your moſt kind and fatherly affection,
I doe diſpoſe my liking to your pleaſure,
But for it is a matter of ſuch moment
As holy marriage, I muſt craue thus much,
To haue ſome conference with my Ghoſtly Father,
Friar Hilderſham, heere by, at Waltham-Abbey,
To be abſolu'd of things, that it is fit
None onely, but my confeſſor ſhould know.

Sir Ar. With all my heart, hee's a reuerend man, and to morrow morning we will meete all at the Abbey, whereby the th'opinion of that Reuerend man,
We will proceed, I like it paſſing well;
Till then we part, boy, I thinke of it, farewell:
A parents care no mortall tongue can tell. Exeunt.

Enter Sir Arthur Clare, and Reymond, Mounchenſey like a Friar.

Sir Ar. Holy young Nouice, I haue told you now
My full intent, and doe referre the reſt
To your profeſſed ſecrecie and care:
And ſee,
Our ſerious ſpeech hath ſtollen vpon the way,
That we are come vnto the Abbey-gate.

Becauſe I know Mounchenſey is a Foxe,
That craftily doth ouer looke my dooings,
Ile not be ſeene, not I; Tuſh, I haue done,
I had a daughter but ſhee's now a Nun;
Farewell deare Sonne, farewell. Exit.

Moun. Fare you well, I, you haue done;
Your Daughter ſir, ſhall not be long a Nunne.
O my rare Tutor, neuer mortall braine,
Plotted out ſuch a plot of policie;
And my deere boſome is ſo great with laughter,
Begot by his ſimplicity and error:
My ſoule is fai'n in labour with her ioy:
O my friends! Franke Ieringham, and Clare,
Did you but know but how this ieſt takes fire,
That good ſir Arthur, thinking me a Nouice,
Hath euen pour'd himſelfe into my boſome;
O you would vent your ſpleenes with tickling mirth.
But Reymond peace, and haue an eye about,
For feare perhaps ſome of the Nunnes looke out.
Peace and Charity within,
Neuer toucht with deadly ſinne;
I caſt Holy-water poore,
On this wall, and on this doore,
That from euill ſhall defend,
And keepe you from the vgly Fiend,
Euill ſpright by night nor day,
Shall approach or come this way;
Elfe nor Fayrie, by this grace,
Day nor night ſhall haunt this place. Holy Maydens knock.

Anſwer within. Who's that which knocks? ha, who's there?

Moun. Gentle Nun, heere is a Friar. Enter Nunne.

Nun. A Friar without, now Chriſt vs ſaue:
Holy man, what wouldſt thou haue?

Moun. Holie Maide, I hither come,
From Friar and Father Hilderſome,
By the fauour and the grace
Of the Prioreſſe of this place,

Amongſt

Amogſt you all to viſite one,
That's come for approbation,
Before ſhe was as now you are,
The Daughter of ſir Arthur Clare:
But ſince ſhe now became a Nun,
Call'd Milliſcent of Edmonton.

Nun. Holy Man repoſe you there,
This newes I'le to our Abbas beare:
To tell what a man is ſent,
And your meſſage, and intent.

Moun. Benedicitie.

Nun. Benedicitie. Exit.

Moun. Doe my good plumpe wench; if all fall right,
Ile make your Siſter-hood one leſſe by night:
Now happie fortune ſpeede this merry drift,
I like a wench comes roundly to her ſhrift.

Enter Lady and Milliſcent.

Lady. Haue Friars recourſe then to the houſe of Nunnes?

Mill. Madam, it is the order of this place,
When any Virgin comes for approbation,
Leaſt that for feare, or ſuch ſiniſter practiſe,
She ſhould be forc'd to vndergoe this vaile,
Which ſhould proceede from Conſcience and Deuotion:
A Viſitor is ſent from Waltham Houſe,
To take the true confeſſion of the Maide.

Lady. Is that the order? I commend it well,
You to your ſhrift, Ile backe vnto the Cell. Exit.

Moun. Life of my ſoule, bright Angell.

Mill. What meanes the Friar?

Moun. O Milliſcent, tis I.

Mill. My heart miſgiues me, I ſhould know that voice,
You, who are you? The holy Virgin bleſſe me.
Tell me your Name, you ſhall ere you confeſſe me.

Moun. Monnchenſey thy true friend.

Mill, My Reymond, my deere heart,
Sweete life giue leaue to my diſtracted ſoule,

To wake a little from this swoon of ioy,
By what meanes cam'st thou to assume this shape?
Moun. By meanes of Peter Fabell, my kinde tutor,
Who in the habite of Friar Hilderſham,
Franke Ierninghams old friend and confessor,
Plotted by Franke, by Fabell, and my selfe,
And so deliuered to sir Arthur Clare,
Who brought me heere vnto the Abbey-gate,
To be his Nun-maide Daughters Visitor.
Mill. You are all sweet traitors to my poore old Father;
O my deare life, I was a dream'd to night,
That as I was praying in my Psalter,
There came a Spirit vnto me as I kneeld,
And by his strong perswasions tempted me
To leaue this Nunrie; and me thought
He came in the most glorious Angell shape,
That mortall eye did euer looke vpon.
Ha, thou art sure that Spirit, for theres no forme,
Is in mine eie so glorious as thine owne.
Moun. O thou Idolatresse that dost this worship,
To him whose likenesse is but praise of thee,
Thou bright vnsetting starr, which through this vaile,
For very enuy makest the Sun looke pale.
Mill. Well Visitor, least that perhaps my Mother
Should thinke the Friar too strickt in his decrees,
I this confesse to my sweet Ghostly Father,
If chaste pure loue be sin, I must confesse,
I haue offended three yeares now with thee.
Moun. But doe you yet repent you of the same?
Mill. Yfaith I cannot.
Moun. Nor will I absolue thee,
Of that sweet sin, though it be Veniall,
Yet haue the penance of a thousand kisses.
And I enioyne you to this Pilgrimage,
That in the euening you bestow your selfe
Heere in the walke neere to the willow-ground,
Where Ile be ready both with Men and Horse.

To waite your comming, and conuey you hence,
Vnto a lodge I haue in Enfield Chase:
No more replie if that you yeeld consent,
I see more eies vpon our stay are bent.

Mitl. Sweet life farewell, tis done; let that suffice,
What my tongue failes, I send thee by mine eyes. Exit.

Enter Fabell, Clare, and Ierningham.

Ier. Now Visitor, how does this new made Nun?

Cla. Come, come, how does the noble Capouchin?

Moun. She may be poore in spirit, but for the flesh tis fat and plumpe boyes:
Ah Rogues, there is a company of Girles would turne you all Friars.

Fab. But how Mounchensey? How Lad for the wench?

Moun Zounds Lads, yfaith I thanke my holy habite
I haue confest her, and the Lady Prioresse hath giuen me Ghostly Counsell, with her blessing.
And how say ye boyes,
If I be chose the weekely visitor?

Cla. Blood, shee'le haue more a Nun vnbagd to sing Masse then.

Ier. The Abbot of Waltham will haue as many Children, to put to Nurse, as he has Calues in the Marsh.

Moun. Well to be briefe, the Nun will soone at night turne Lippit; if I can but deuise to quit her cleanely of the Nunrie, she is mine owne, Fab. But sirra Reymond, what newes of Peter Fabell at the House?

Moun. Tush, hee's the onely Man; a Negromancer, and a Coniurer, that workes for young Mounchensey altogether; and if it be not for Friar Benedicke, that he can crosse him by his learned skill, the wench is gone.
Fabell will fetch her out by very Magicke.

Fab. Stands the winde there Boy? keepe them in that key,
The wench is ours before to morrow day:

Well

Well Ralph and Franke, as ye are Gentlemen, sticke to vs close this once; you know your Fathers haue Men and Horse lie readie still at Chesson, to watch the Coast be cleere, to scout about, and haue an eye vnto *Mounchensey*es walkes; therefore you two may houer thereabouts, and no man will suspect you for the matter: be ready but to take her at our hands, leaue vs to scamble for her getting out.

Ier. Blood, if all Hartford-shire were at our heeles, weele carry her away in spight of them.

Cla. But whether Raymond?

Mou. To Brians vpper Lodge in Enfield-Chase, he is mine honest friend, and a tall Keeper, Ile send my Man vnto him presently, to acquaint him with your comming, and intent.

Fab. Be briefe, and secret.

Moun. Soone at night, remember
You bring your Horses to the willow ground.

Ier. Tis done, no more.

Cla. We will not faile the hower.
My life and fortune now lies in your power.

Fab. About our busines, Reymond lets away,
Thinke of your hower, it drawes well off the day. Exeunt.

Enter Blague, Bankes, Smug, and sir Iohn.

Bla. Come ye Hungarion Pilchers, we are once more come vnder the Zona Torrida of the Forrest, lets be resolute, lets flie too and againe; & the deuill come, weele put him to his Interrogatories, and not budge a foote, what? foote Ile put fire into you, yee shall all three serue the good Duke of Norfolke.

Smug. Mine Host, my Bully, my pretious Consull, my noble Holefernes, I haue bin drunke in thy house, twenty times and ten, all's one for that, I was last night in the third Heauen, my braine was poore, it had yest in't; but now I am a man of action, is't not so Lad?

Bank. Why? now thou hast two of the Liberall Sciences about thee, wit and reason, thou maist serue the Duke of Europe.

Smug. I will serue the Duke of Christendome, and doe him more credit in his Cellar, then all the Plate in his Butterie, is't not so Lad? Sir Iohn.

Sir Ioh. Mine Hoſt, and Smug, ſtand there Banks, you, and your horſe, keepe together, but lie cloſe; ſhew no trickes, for feare of the Keeper: If wee be ſcar'd, weele meete in the Church-porch at Enfield.

Smug. Content ſir Iohn.

Banks. Smug, doſt not thou remember the Tree thou felleſt out of laſt night?

Smug. Tuſh, and't had beene as high as an Abbey, I ſhould nere haue hurt my ſelfe, I haue fallen into the Riuer, comming home from Waltham, and ſcapte drowning.

Sir Iohn. Come, ſeuer, feare no ſpirits, weele haue a Bucke preſently, we haue watched later then this for a Doe, mine hoſt.

Hoſt. Thou ſpeakeſt as true as Veluet.

Sir Iohn. Why then come, graſſe and hey, &c. Exeunt.

Enter Clare, Ierningham, and Milleſcent.

Cla. Franke Ierningham?

Ier. Speake ſoftly Rogue, how now?

Cla. Sfoot, we ſhall loſe our way, its ſo darke, whereabouts are wee?

Ier. Why man, at Poiters Gate;
The way lies right: Harke, the clocke ſtrikes at Enfield, what's the houre?

Cla. Ten, the Bell ſaies.

Ier. A lies in's throate, it was but eight when we ſet out of Cheſton; Sir Iohn and his ſexton are at their Ale to night, the Clocke runnes at randome.

Cla. Nay, as ſure as thou liu'ſt the villanous Vicar is abroad in the Chaſe this darke night; the ſtone Prieſt ſteales more Veniſon then halfe the Countrey.

Ier. Milleſcent, how doſt thou?

Mill. Sir, very well,
I would to God we were at Brians lodge.

Cla. We ſhall anon, nounes harke,
What meanes this noiſe?

Ier. Stay, I heare Horſe-men.

Cla. I heare Foote-men too.

I. Nay then I haue it, we haue bene discouered;
And we are followed by our Fathers men.

Mist. Brother, and friend, alas what shall we doe?

Cla. Sister, speake softly, or we are descride,
They are hard vpon vs, what so ere they be,
Shadow your selfe behinde this brake of Ferne,
Weele get into the wood, and let them passe.

Enter sir Iohn, Blague, Smug, and Bankes, one after another.

Sir Iohn. Grasse and hey, we are all mortall, the Keeper's abroad, and theres an end.

Banks. Sir Iohn.

Sir Iohn. Neighbour Bankes, what newes?

Banks. Zounds sir Iohn, the Keepers are abroad; I was hard by'am.

Sir Iohn. Grasse and hey, whers mine Host Blague?

Bla. Here Metropolitane, the Philistines are vpon vs, be silent; Let vs serue the good Duke of Norfolke: But where is Smug.

Smug. Here, a poxe on ye all Dogges, I haue kild the greatest Bucke in Brians walke; shift for your selues, all the Keepers are vp, lets meete in Enfield Church-porch, away, we are all taken else. Exeunt.

Enter Brian, with his Man, and his Horne.

Bri. Ralph, hearst thou any stirring?

Ra. I heard one speake here hard by, in the bottome; peace Master; speake lowe, nownes, if I did not heare a Bow goe off, and the Bucke bray, I neuer heard Deere in my life.

Bri. When went your fellowes into their walkes?

Ra. An howre agoe.

Bri. Life, is there stealers abroad, and wee cannot heare of them? where the Deuill are my Men to night? sirra, goe vp the winde toward Buckleys Lodge:
Ile cast about the bottome with my Hound, and I will meete thee vnder Cony Oake.

Ra. I will sir. Exit.

Bri.

Bri How now? by the Masse my Hound stayes vpon something; harke, harke, Bowman, harke, harke, there.

Mill. Brother; Franke Ierningham, Brother Clare.

Bri. Peace thats a womans voice, stand, who's there? stand, or Ile shoote.

Mill. O Lord, hold your hands I meane no harme sir.

Bri. Speake, who are you?

Mill. I am a Maide sir: who? Maister Brian?

Bri. The very same: sure I should know her voice; Mistris Millescent.

Mill. I, it is I sir.

Bri. God for his passion, what make you here alone? I look'd for you at my Lodge an hower agoe, what meanes you Company to leaue you thus? who brought you hither?

Mill. My brother sir, and Maister Ierningham, who hearing Folkes about vs in the Chase, feard it had bene Sir Arthur, and my Father, (who had persude vs) thus dispersed our selues, till they were past vs.

Bri. But where be they?

Mill. They be not farre off, heere about the Groue.

Enter Clare, and Ierningham.

Cla. Be not afraid man, I heard Brians tongue, thats certaine.

Ier. Call softly for your Sister.

Cla. Millescent.

Mill. I Brother, here.

Bri. Master Clare.

Cla. I told you it was Brian.

Bri. Whoes that, Maister Ierningham? you are a couple of hot-shots; does a man commit his wench to you, to put her to grasse at this time of night?

Ier. We heard a noyse about vs in the Chase,
And fearing that our Fathers had pursude vs,
Seuered our selues.

Cla. Brian, how hapned'st thou on her?

Bri. Seeking for stealers are abroad to night,
My hound stayed on her, and so found her out.

Cla. They were theſe ſtealers that affrighted vs,
I was hard vpon them, when they horſt their Deere,
And I perceiue they tooke me for a Keeper.

Bri. Which way tooke they?

Ier. Towards Enfield.

Bri. A plague vpon't, that's the damnd Prieſt, and Blague of the George, he that ſerues the good Duke of Norfolke.

A Noyſe within, Follow, follow, follow.

Cla. Peace, thats my Fathers voice.

Bri. Nownes, you haue ſuſpected them, and now they are heere indeed.

Mil. Alas, what ſhall we doe?

Bri. If you goe to the Lodge, you are ſurely taken,
Strike downe the wood to Enfield preſently,
And if Mounchenſey come, Ile ſend him ty'ee:
Let me alone to buſſle with your Father,
I warrant you, that I will keepe them play,
Till you haue quit the Chaſe, away, away.
Whoo's there? Enter the Knights.

Sir Ralph. In the Kings Name, purſue the Rauiſher.

Bri. Stand, or Ile ſhoote.

Sir Ar. Who's there?

Bri. I am the Keeper, that doe charge you ſtand,
You haue ſtollen my Deere.

Sir Ar. We ſtolne thy Deere, wee doe purſue a Thiefe.

Bri You are arrand Thieues, and ye haue ſtolne my Deere.

Sir Ra. We are Knights, Sir Arthur Clare, and ſir Ralph Iernyngham.

Bri. The more your ſhame, that Knights ſhould be ſuch Thieues.

Sir Ar. Who? or what art thou?

Bri. My name is Brian, Keeper of this walke.

Sir Ra. O Brian, a villaine,
Thou haſt receiued my Daughter to thy Lodge.

Bri. You haue ſtolne the beſt Deere in my walke to night. my Deere.

Sir Ar. My Daughter.

Stop

Stop not my way.

Bri. What make you in my walke? you haue ſtolne the beſt Buck in my walke to night.

Sir Ar. My Daughter.

Bri. My Deere.

Sir Ra Where is Mounchenſey?

Bri. Wher's my Bucke?

Sir Ar. I will complaine me of thee to the King.

Bri. Ile complaine vnto the King you ſpoyle his Game: Tis ſtrange that Men of your account and calling, will offer it, I tell you true, ſir Arthur, and ſir Ralph, that none but you haue onely ſpoyld my Game.

Sir Ar. I charge ou ſtop vs not.

Bri. I charge you both get out of my ground, Is this a time for ſuch as you, Men of Place, and of your Grauitie, to be abroad a theeuing? tis a ſhame, and a fore God if I had ſhot at you, I had ſerued you well enough. Exeunt.

Enter Banks the Miller wet on his Legges.

Ban. Foote, heers a darke night indeed, I thinke I haue bin in fifteen ditches betweene this and the Forreſt: ſoft, heers Enfielde Church: I am ſo wet with climing ouer into an Orchard, for to ſteale ſome Filberts: well, heere Ile ſit in the Church-porch, and waite for the reſt of my Conſorts.

Enter Sexton.

Sex. Heers a skie as blacke as Lucifer, God bleſſe vs, heere was goodman Theophilus buried, he was the beſt Nut-cracker that euer dwelt in Enfield: well, tis nine a clocke, tis time to ring Curfew. Lord bleſſe vs? what a white thing is that in the Church-porch. O Lord, my Legges are too weake for my Body, my Haire is too ſtiffe for my Night-cap, my heart failes; this is the Ghoſt of Theophilus, O Lord it followes me, I can not ſay my praiers and one would giue me a Thouſand pound: good Spirit, I haue Bowld, and Drunke, and followed the Hounds with you a thouſand times, though I haue not the ſpirit now to deale with you; O Lord.

Enter Prieſt.

Pri. Graſſe and hey, we are all mortall, who's there?

Sex We are graſſe and hey indeed; I know you to be Maſter Parſon by your Phraſe.

Pri. Sexton.

Sex. I ſir.

Pri. For mortalities ſake, whats the matter?

Sex, O Lord, I am a man of an other element; Maſter Theophilus Ghoſt is in the Church porch, there was a hundred cats all fire, dauncing euen now; and they are clombe vp to the top of the ſteeple, Ile not into the Belfree for a world.

Pri. O goodman Saloman; I haue bene about a deede of darkneſſe to night; O Lord I ſaw fifteene ſpirits in the Forreſt, like white Bulles, if I lie I am an arrant Theefe: Mortality haunts vs, graſſe and hey the Deuills at our heeles, and lets hence to the Parſonage. Exeunt.

The Miller comes out very ſoftly.

Mill. What noiſe was that? tis the watch, ſure that villanous vnluckie Rogue Smug is tane vpon my life, and then all our knauerie comes out, I heard one cry ſure.

Enter Hoſt Blague.

Hoſt. If I goe ſteale any more Veniſon, I am a Paradox, foot I can ſcarce beare the ſinne of my Fleſh in the day, tis ſo heauie, if I turne not honeſt, and ſerue the good Duke of Norfolke, as a true Mareterraneum Skinner ſhould doe, let me neuer looke higher then the element of a Conſtable.

Mill. By the maſſe there are ſome watchmen; I heare them name Maſter Conſtable, I would my Mill were at Eunuch and wanted her ſtones ſo I were hence.

Hoſt. Who's there?

Mill. Tis the Conſtable by this light, ile ſteale hence, and if I can meete mine Hoſt glague, ile tell him how Smug is tane, & will him to looke to himſelfe. Exit.

Hoſt.

Hoſt. What the Deuill is that white thing? this ſame is a Church-yeard, and I haue heard that Ghoſts, and villanous Goblins haue beene ſeene heere.

Enter Sexton, and Prieſt.

Pr. Graſſe and hey, O that I could coniure, we ſaw a Spirit here in the Church-yeard; and in the fallow field thers the Deuill, with a Mans body vpon his backe in a white ſheete.

Sex. It may be a womans Body ſir Iohn.

Pri. If ſhe be a woman, the ſheete damne her: Bleſſe vs, what a night of mortalitie is this?

Hoſt. Prieſt.

Pri. Mine Hoſt.

Hoſt. Did you not ſee a Spirit all in white, croſſe you at the ſtile?

Sex. O no mine Hoſt, but there ſate one in the Porch, I haue not breath enough left to bleſſe me from the Deuill.

Hoſt. Whoes that?

Pri. The Sexton, almoſt frighted out of his witts: Did you ſee Bankes, or Smug.

Hoſt. No, they are gone to Waltham ſure, I would faine hence come, lets to my houſe, Ile nere ſerue the Duke of Norfolke in this faſhion againe whilſt I breath. If the Deuiill be amongſt vs, tis time to hoiſt ſaile, and cry Roomer: Keepe together ſexton, thou art ſecret: What? lets be Comfortable one to another.

Pri. We are all mortall mine Hoſt.

Hoſt. True, and Ile ſerue God in the night hereafter, afore the Duke of Norfolke. Exeunt.

Enter ſir Ralph Clare, and ſir Arthur Ieringham, truſſing their points, as new vp.

Sir Ra. Good morrow gentle Knight,
A happy day after your ſhort nights reſt.

Sir Ar. Ha, ha, ſir Ralph, ſtirring ſo ſoone indeed,
Birlady ſir, reſt would haue done right well,

Our

Our Riding late last night, has made me drowsie,
Goe to, goe to, those daies are gone with vs.
Sir Ra. sir Arthur, sir Arthur, care goe with those daies,
Let'am euen goe together, let'am goe:
Tis time yfaith that we were in our graues,
When Children leaue obedience to their Parents,
When ther's no feare of God, no care, no dutie:
Well, well, nay, it shall not doe, it shall not,
No Mounchensey, thou't here on't, thou shalt,
Thou shalt yfaith, Ile hang thy son if there be law in England:
A mans childe rauisht from a Nunrie:
This is rare; well, thers one gon for Friar Hildersham.
Sir Ar. Nay, gentle Knight doe not vexe thus,
It will but hurt your heate;
You cannot grieue more then I doe, but to what end; but harke
You sir Ralph, I was about to say something; it makes no matter; But harke you in your eare; the Friar's a knaue, but God forgiue me, a Man cannot tell neither, s'foote, I am so out of patience, I know not what to say.
Sir Ral. Theres one went for the Friar an hower agoe,
Comes he not yet? foote, if I doe finde knauery vnder's Cowle,
Ile tickle him: Ile firke him; here here, he's here, he's here:
Good morrow Friar, good morrow gentle Friar.

Enter Hildersham.

Sir Ar. Good morrow Father Hildersham, good morrow.
Hil. Good morrow reuerend Knights vnto you both.
Sir Ar. Father, how now? you heare how matters goe,
I am vndone, my Childe is cast away,
You did your best; at least I thinke the best,
But we are all crost, flatly all is dasht.
Hil. Alas good Knights, how might the matter be?
Let me vnderstand your griefe for Charitie.
Sir Ar. Who does not vnderstand my griefe? alas, alas!
And yet you doe not: will the Church permit,
A Nunne in approbation of her Habit,

To

To be rauiſhed.

Hild. A Holy-woman, Benedicity; now God forefend that any ſhould preſume to touch the ſiſter of a Holy-houſe.

Sir Ar. Ieſus deliuer me.

Sir Ral. Why, Milleſcent the Daughter of this Knight, is out of Cheſton taken this laſt night.

Hild. Was that faire Maiden late become a Nun?

Sir Ral. Was ſhe (quoth a?) knauerie, knauery, knauery, knauery; I ſmell it, I ſmell it yfaith; is the winde in that doore? is it euen ſo? doſt thou aske me that now?

Hild. It is the firſt time that ere I heard of it.

Sir Ar. Thats very ſtrange.

Sir Ra. Why tell me Friar, tell me, thou art counted a holy man; doe not play the hypocrite with me, nor (beare with me) I cannot diſſemble: did I ought but by thy owne conſent? by thy allowance? nay further, by thy warrant?

Hild. Why reuerend Knight?

Sir Ra. Vnreuerend Friar.

Hild. Nay then giue me leaue ſir to depart in quiet, I had hop'd you had ſent for me to ſome other end.

Sir Ar. Nay, ſtay good Friar, if any thing hath hapt,
About this matter in thy loue to vs,
That thy ſtrickt order cannot iuſtifie;
Admit it to be ſo, we will couer it,
Take no care man;
Diſclaime not yet my counſell and aduiſe,
The wiſeſt man that is may be ore-reacht.

Hild. Sir Arthur, by my Order, and my Faith,
I know not what you meane.

Sir Ra. By your Order, & by your faith, this is moſt ſtrange; why tell me Friar, are not you Confeſſor to my ſonne Francke?

Hild. Yes that I am.

Sir Ral. And did not this good Knight heere, and my ſelfe
Confeſſe with you, being his Ghoſtly Father,
To deale with him about th'vnbanded marriage,
Betwixt him, and that faire young Milleſcent?

Hil. I neuer heard of any match intended.

Sir Ar. Did not we breake our mindes that very time,
That our deuice in making her a Nunne,
Was but a colour, and a very plotte,
To put by young Mounchenſey; Iſt not true?

Hild. The more I ſtriue to know what you ſhould meane, the leſſe I vnderſtand you.

Sir Ral. Did not you tell vs ſtill, how Peter Fabell at length would croſſe vs, if wee tooke not heed?

Hil. I haue heard of one that is a great Magitian,
But hee's about the Vniuerſity.

Sir Ral. Did you not ſend your Nouice Benedic,
To perſwade the girle to leaue Mounchenſeyes loue?
To croſſe that Peter Fabell in his Art,
And to that purpoſe made him Viſitor?

Hil. I neuer ſent my Nouice from my houſe,
Nor haue we made our viſitation yet.

Sir Ar. Neuer ſent him? Nay, did he not goe? and did not I direct him to the houſe, and conferre with him by the way? and did he not tell me what charge he had receiued from you. word by word, as I requeſted at your hands?

Hil. That you ſhall know, he came along with me, and ſtaies without; come hither Benedic. Enter Benedic.
Young Benedic, were you ere ſent by me to Cheſton Nunnerie; for a Viſitor?

Ben. Neuer ſir, truely.

Sir Ar. Stranger then all the reſt.

Sir Ra. Did not I direct you to the houſe?
Conferre with you from Waltham Abbey,
Vnto Cheſton wall?

Ben. I neuer ſaw you ſir before this hower.

Sir Ral. The Deuill thou didſt not: Hoe Chamberlaine.
Enter Chamberlaine.

Cham. Anon, anon.

Sir Ral. Call min Hoſt Blague hither.

Cham. I will ſend one ouer ſir to ſee if he be vp, I thinke he be ſcarce ſtirring yet.

Sir

Sir Ra. Why knaue, didſt thou not tell me an houre agoe mine Hoſt was vp?

Cham. I ſir, my maſter's vp.

Sir Ra. You knaue, is a vp, and is a not vp? Doſt thou mocke me?

Cham. I ſir, my Maſter is vp, but I thinke Maſter Blague indeede be not ſtirring.

Sir Ra. Why who's thy Maſter? is not the maſter of the houſe thy maſter?

Cham. Yes ſir, but M. Blague dwells ouer the way.

Sir Ar. Is not this the George? before Ioue theres ſome villany in this.

Cham. Foote, our ſignes remoou'd, this is ſtrange.

Enter Blague truſſing his poynts.

Hoſt. Chamberlaine, ſpeake vp to the new Lodgings, Bid Nell looke well to the bak't meates, How now my old Ienerts banke, my horſe, My caſtle, lie in Waltham all night, and not Vnder the canopie of your Hoſt Blagues houſe?

Sir Ar. Mine Hoſt, mine hoſt, we lay all night at the George in Waltham, but whether the George be your fe-ſimple or no, tis a queſtion, looke vpon your ſigne.

Hoſt. Body of ſaint George, this is mine ouerthwart Neighbour hath done this; if I doe not indite him at the next Aſſiſes for Burglary, let me die of the yellowes; for I ſee tis no boote in theſe daies to ſerue the good Duke of Norfolke, the villanous world is turn'd manger, one Iade deceiues an other, and and your Oſtler playes his part commonly for the fourth ſhare, haue we comedies in hand, you whorſon vilianous male London-leether?

Sir Ar. Mine Hoſt, we haue had the moylingſt night of it that euer we had in our liues.

Hoſt, I ſt certaine?

Sir Ar. We haue beene in the Forreſt all night almoſt.

Hoſt. Foote, how did I miſſe you? hart, I was ſtealing of a

Bucke there.

Sir Ar. A plague on you? we were ſtayed for you.

Hoſt. Were you my noble Romanes? why, you ſhall ſhare, the veniſon is a footing, Sine Cerere & Baccho, friget Venere; that is, theres a good breake-faſt prouided for a Marriage, that's in my houſe this morning.

Sir Ar. A marriage mine Hoſt?

Hoſt. A Coniunction copulatiue, a gallant match, betweene your Daughter, and M. Raymond Mounchenſey, young Iuuents.

Sir Aa. How?

Hoſt. Tis firme, tis done,
weele ſhew you a Preſident i'th Ciuill-law for't.

Sir Ra. How! married?

Hoſt. Leaue trickes, and admiration, theres a cleanely paire of ſheetes on the bed in the Orchard chamber, and they ſhall lie there; what? Ile doe it, I ſerue the good Duke of Norfolke.

Sir Ar. Thou ſhalt repent this Blague.

Sir Ral. If any Law in England will make thee ſmart for this, expect it with all ſeueritie.

Hoſt. I renownce your defiance, if you parle ſo roughly, ile barracado my gates againſt you: ſtand faire Bully; Prieſt come off from the reward; what can you ſay now? t'was done in my houſe, I haue ſhelter i'th Court for't; Doe you ſee yon bay window? I ſerue the good Duke of Norfolke, and tis his Lodging, ſtorme, I care not, ſeruing the good Duke of Norfolke: thou art an actor in this, and thou ſhalt carry fire in thy face eternally.

Enter Smug, Mounchenſey, Harry Clare, and Milleſcent.

Smug. Fire, nouns, ther's no fire in England like your Trinidado ſacke; is any man here humorous? wee ſtole the Veniſon, and weele iuſtifie it; ſay you now.

Hoſt. In good ſooth Smug, theres more Sacke on the fire Smug.

Smug. I doe not take any exceptions againſt your Sacke, but if you'le lend me a pike-ſtaffe, ile cudgell them all hence, by this hand.

Hoſt.

Hoſt. I ſay thou ſhalt into the Cellar.

Smug. S'foot mine Hoſt, ſhalls not grapple? Pray pray you; I could fight now for all the world like a Cockatrices ege; ſhalls not ſerue the Duke of Norfolke? Exit.

Hoſt. In skipper in.

Sir Arth. Sirra, hath young Mounchenſey married your Siſter?

Har Cla. Tis certaine ſir; heeres the Prieſt that coupled them; the Parties ioyned, and the honeſt witneſſe that cride, Amen.

Moun. Sir Arthur Clare, my new created Father, I beſeech you heare me.

Sir Ar. Sir, ſir, you are a fooliſh boy, you haue done that you cannot anſwer; I dare be bold to ceaze on her from you, for ſhee's a profeſt Nun.

Mill. With pardon ſir, that name is quite vndon,
This true-loue knot cancelles both Maide and Nun.
When firſt you told me I ſhould act that part,
How cold and bloody it crept ore my heart.
To Cheſſon with a ſmiling brow I went,
But yet, deere ſir, it was to this intent,
That my ſweet Raymond might finde better meanes,
To ſteale me thence: in briefe diſguiſde he came,
Like Nouice to old Father Hilderſham:
His Tutor heere did act that cunning part,
And in our loue hath ioynd much wit to Art.

Cla. Is't euen ſo?

Mill. With pardon therefore we intreat your ſmiles,
Loue thwarted, turnes it ſelfe to thouſand wiles.

Cla. Young Maiſter Iernigham, were you an actor, in your owne loues abuſe?

Ier. My thoughts, good ſir,
Did labour ſeriouſly vnto this end,
To wrong my ſelfe ere Ide abuſe my friend.

Hoſt. He ſpeakes like a Batchelor of muſicke, all in numbers; Knights, if I had knowne you would haue let this couie of Partridges ſitte thus long vpon their knees vnder my ſigne-poſt,

I would haue ſpread my doore with couerlids.

Sir Ar. Well ſir, for this your ſigne was remooued, was it?

Hoſt. Faith we followed the directions of the deuill Maſter Peter Fabell, and Smug (Lord bleſſe vs) could neuer ſtand vpright ſince.

Sir Ar You ſir, twas you was his Miniſter that maried them.

Sir Io. Sir to proue my ſelfe an honeſt man, being that I was laſt night in the Forreſt ſtealing Veniſon; now ſir to haue you ſtand my friend, if the matter ſhould be cal'd in queſtion, I married your Daughter to this worthy Gentleman.

Sir Ar. I may chance to requite you, and make your necke cracke for't.

Sir Io. If you doe, I am as reſolute as my Neighbour Vicar of Waltham-Abbey: a hem. Graſſe and hay, we are all mortall, Lets liue till we be hangd mine Hoſt, And be merry, and theres an end.

Enter Fabian.

Fab. Now Knights I enter, now my part begins. To end this difference, know, at firſt I knew What you intended, ere your loue tooke flight, From old Mounchenſey; you ſir Arthur Clare, Were minded to haue married this ſweet beauty, To young Fraucke Ieringham; to croſſe this match, I vſde ſome pretty ſleights, but I proteſt, Such as but fate vpon the skirts of Art, No Coniurations, nor ſuch weighty ſpels, As tie the ſoule to their performancy: Theſe for his loue who once was my deare Puple, Haue I affected: Now me thinks tis ſtrange, That you being old in wiſedome, ſhould thus knit, Your forehead on this match; ſince reaſon failes, No Law can curbe the Louers raſh atempt, Yeares in reſiſting this, are ſadly ſpent: Smile then vpon your daughter and kind ſonne, And let our toyle to future ages proue, The Deuill of Edmonton did good in loue.

Sir

Sir Ar. Well, tis in vaine to crosse the Prouidence?
Deere Sonne I take thee vp into my heart,
Rise Daughter, this is a kinde Fathers part.

Host. Why sir George, send for Spindles Noise presently,
Ha, ert be night, Ile serue the good Duke of Norfolke.

Sir Ioh. Grasse and hey, mine Host, lets liue till we die, and be merry, and theres an end.

Sir Ar. What, is breakefast ready mine Host?

Host. Tis my little Hebrew.

Sir Ar. Sirra, ride straight to Chesson-Nunrie,
Fetch thence my Lady, the House I know,
By this time misses their youug Votarie,
Come Knights lets in.

Bilbo. I will to horse presently sir, a plague on my Lady, I shall misse a good breakfast. Smug, how chance you cut so plaguely behind, Smug?

Smug. Stand away, ile founder yon else.

Bil. Farewell Smug, thou art in an other element,

Smug. I will be by and by, I will be Saint George againe.

Sir Ar. Take heed the fellow doe not hurt himselfe.

Sir Ra. Did we not last night finde two St. Georges heere?

Fab. Yes Knights, this Martialist was one of them.

Cla. Then thus conclude your night of merriment.

Exeunt Omnes.

FINIS.
